When NOT to reach for redline.

Code diffs. For two code snippets side-by-side, use `compare-code`. redline is for natural language — legal, regulatory, contractual — not source code.

Paraphrased clauses. If the quoted text isn't verbatim, the diff is meaningless. Either render the actual clause with its diff, or move to `compare-prose` for narrative comparison.

Long passage with one tiny diff. If one word changed in a paragraph, quote only the affected sentence or two. A wall of unchanged text with one inline mark buries the change.

RELATED COMPONENTS

- `compare-code` — the diff is source code, not natural language
- `compare-prose` — two narrative alternatives, not verbatim amendments
- `before-after` — the change is structural state, not text
- `obligation-matrix` — comparing many regimes against shared obligations
