

STATEMENT · CANVAS · PROSE

content

Generic prose slide — heading plus paragraphs or a short list.

The catch-all prose slide.

Use CONTENT when no more specific component fits. A heading, a paragraph, optionally a short bullet list. Keep the slide under forty words.

For lists of items, prefer `list`, `cards-grid`, or `cards-stack`.

For comparisons, prefer `compare-prose` or `compare-table`.

For single metrics, prefer `big-number` or `stats`.

When NOT to reach for content.

Forced shape into prose.

If the content is a comparison, use compare-prose. If it's a list of options, use cards-grid. If it's a sequence, use list-steps. Reaching for content when shape exists wastes the slide.

Wall of text.

More than 40 words and the audience tunes out. The layout doesn't fight back — it'll happily render a 200-word paragraph that nobody reads. Split or trim.

Multiple headings.

Content carries one heading and one idea. Two h2s on one slide reads as two slides crammed together. Split into two content slides or use a structured layout.

See also.

RELATED COMPONENTS

- `quote` — the prose IS a quote — let the quotation chrome carry it
- `big-number` — the prose IS a metric — let the number carry it
- `cards-grid` — the prose IS a parallel list of items
- `compare-prose` — the prose IS a two-way comparison
- `list-steps` — the prose IS an ordered sequence