

STATEMENT • PANEL • STRUCTURE

split-list

Featured left panel + supporting list on the right.

T

The best product does
not win. The most
understood one does.

Default • split-list

Why understanding wins

Clarity is a product decision

If a prospect can't state our value in a sentence, that's an architecture problem, not a messaging one.

Onboarding is the first argument

The moment a user first succeeds sets the frame for everything that follows.

Comprehension drives retention

Users who understand the system's logic stay through friction; users who don't churn at the first one.

Audience • Product and growth leadership

Intent • Win on comprehension, not feature count

Use when

Decks with image slides

Image bleed sits left; the panel reads as a closing statement on the right.

Alternating visual rhythm

Pair a default split-list and a mirrored one across a section to keep the eye moving.

Right-to-left framing

The argument reads more naturally when the claim follows the evidence rather than preceding it.

And the same claim,
now with the panel on the right.

S

Seven items
without chrome.

Dense – strip card chrome, hairline separators • split-list dense

Index register

1

First item

One-line description.

2

Second item

One-line description.

3

Third item

One-line description.

E

Eight items across two columns.

Columns – two-column right panel · split-list columns

Column layout

First

One line.

Second

One line.

Third

One line.

Fourth

One line.

Fifth

One line.

Sixth

One line.

T

The best product does
not win. The most
understood one does.

Composition: dark • split-list dark

Why understanding wins

Clarity is a product decision

If a prospect can't state our value in a sentence, that's an architecture problem, not a messaging one.

Onboarding is the first argument

The moment a user first succeeds sets the frame for everything that follows.

Comprehension drives retention

Users who understand the system's logic stay through friction; users who don't churn at the first one.

Audience • Product and growth leadership

Intent • Win on comprehension, not feature count

T

The best product does
not win. The most
understood one does.

composition: compact • split-list compact

Why understanding wins

Clarity is a product decision

If a prospect can't state our value in a sentence, that's an architecture problem, not a messaging one.

Onboarding is the first argument

The moment a user first succeeds sets the frame for everything that follows.

Comprehension drives retention

Users who understand the system's logic stay through friction; users who don't churn at the first one.

Audience • Product and growth leadership

Intent • Win on comprehension, not feature count

Why understanding wins

Clarity is a product decision

If a prospect can't state our value in a sentence, that's an architecture problem, not a messaging one.

Onboarding is the first argument

The moment a user first succeeds sets the frame for everything that follows.

Comprehension drives retention

Users who understand the system's logic stay through friction; users who don't churn at the first one.

Audience • Product and growth leadership

Intent • Win on comprehension, not feature count

When NOT to reach for split-list.

Longer than five points — hard limit. The layout holds exactly 3–5 points. This is a structural constraint, not a preference: beyond five the panel and list lose balance and the right column overflows. Move to `cards-stack` for longer lists or split into two slides. Do not stretch to six.

No panel headline. The dark panel exists to carry a statement. An empty or generic heading wastes the strongest visual real estate on the slide. The `panel-heading` slot is required; there is no valid rendering without it.

Stacking many split-list slides in a row. The dark sidebar is a strong visual signal. Three split-list slides back-to-back numbs the audience to it. Intersperse with content or stats.

See also.

RELATED COMPONENTS

`split-statement` — thesis + one big-number — quantitative version of split-list

`split-brief` — title-style left + executive paragraph right

`big-number` — single statement, no supporting list — the full-canvas version

`cards-stack` — the right-side list grows past four points