

IMAGERY • CANVAS • PROSE

Image as the slide's anchor, with optional text alongside — composition adapts to the asset and the deck.

Activation is where the trial is won or lost.

Two-thirds of trials that reach the first generated report convert to paid; the ones that stall at workspace setup almost never do. Hand the layout any photo — it resolves the composition from the asset's shape.

Built for the long climb.

A portrait photo wants its full height. We give it a column and let the argument run alongside.

A panorama earns the full frame.

When the photo already matches the canvas, let it carry the slide — the message rides in a solid card so it never fights the image.

Exhibit 1 — the network, contained.

The whole asset on a matte with a placard. For diagrams and screenshots where the whitespace is the point.

The setup step is the real funnel.

The title rides the photo on a scrim — a deliberate, editorial choice.

Text leads from the right; image anchors from

When NOT to reach for image.

Decorative stock photo. A generic photograph of 'people in a meeting' next to a content slide is filler. Use content and trust the prose; reserve image for visuals that argue for themselves.

Image too small to read. A diagram or screenshot small enough to fit inside a half-canvas text slot is unreadable from the back of the room. Reach for image gallery (contains it whole) or image spotlight, or move the diagram slide.

Image with five paragraphs of caption. If the prose dominates and the image is a sidebar, you have a content slide that happens to have a photo. Either trust the image (drop the prose) or trust the prose (drop the image).

- `diagram` — the visual is a Mermaid graph, not a photo or screenshot
- `content` — the slide is mostly prose with one inline visual
- `title` — the image is a bookend hero, not the body of a slide
- `quote` — the slide is a quotation, not an image
