

STATEMENT · SPLIT · STRUCTURE

split-brief

Executive brief — dark left anchor, findings list on the right with left-rule chrome.

Enterprise revenue stalled in Q2.

Three structural factors explain 90% of the shortfall — all addressable before Q4 close.

Renewal pricing complexity is driving churn at the segment ceiling.

Four accounts totaling $2.1M ARR declined renewal. Win/loss interviews point to a quote-to-contract gap, not value perception.

Pipeline conversion dropped 11 pp below Q1 — legal review is the chokepoint.

Contract length increased 18 days on average. Root cause is a security addendum introduced in March.

Competitive displacement accelerated in the $80-200K ACV tier.

Seven losses to a single competitor. Time-to-value gap is the exposure.

When NOT to reach for split-brief.

More than 5 findings. Past 5 findings, the right panel becomes a wall of bullets and the layout's balance breaks. Split into two slides or use `cards-stack` for a fuller list.

Lede that's not a sentence. The lede is the framing. A fragment or eyebrow-style phrase wastes the role. Write one declarative sentence that sets up why the findings matter.

Findings without titles. The Title. at the start of each li is what makes the right panel scannable. A naked sentence per bullet reads as paragraph soup; the bold lead is the structure.

See also.

RELATED COMPONENTS

- `split-list` — the right side is a list of supporting points, not findings
- `split-statement` — the left side carries a quote, not a thesis
- `cards-stack` — the slide is mostly the list of findings; no executive framing needed
- `tldr` — 5+ one-line takeaways without supporting detail